

2 m 3 w - Hoping to instill an understanding of the value and cost of freedom, the Smiths take their children along with their Aunt Bernice on a road trip across the country. The trip ends in a national cemetery where great aunt Bernice places flowers on the grave of her young husband who died many years ago defending the country during WWII. The Smith children get a first-hand example of the cost paid for their freedom.